Falcons, Sometimes things just come together. Do you have a group of friends that can complete each other's sentences? How about a teammate that seems to know your next move before you do - and you know theirs too? If so, then our word of the week is for you: Cohesion. Cohesion is the act of or state of holding together. It is when a group of different parts comes together to make something complete or unified. It is a community acting as a community instead of just a bunch of separate parts. Here it is in a sentence: Both our volleyball and football teams have made it as far as they have not only due to their skills, but also the cohesion that the teammates have with each other. They play as a team and win as a team. Check out the display case near the main office if you'd like more information about our word of the week.
